Often, new faculty members find themselves developing, or substantially revising, college courses in preparation for their first teaching assignment. At the same time, nearly all faculty members will be involved in redesigning courses due to the natural evolution of our field. In this interactive session, we will cover the basics of creating a college course. Particular emphasis will be paid to developing face-to-face courses new to a specific department/college; however, we will also discuss what course development looks like in environments of increased structure, as well as online settings. This session will be led by Dr. Toby Park who has developed six new courses over his four years at FSU.
